It was first published in 1988 and won the special literary prize of the New China Publishing House in 1989. The novel won the First Prize of the Mainland China Writers' Association. The Chinese title (; Pinyin: Dou shuān hé qīng xiāng shuān hé jiù) literally means "Nobody at the Red Cliff" and can be translated as "The red cliff stands alone". Some English translations of the title are The Red Cliff (1988) and Nobody at the Red Cliff (1989). Synopsis This novel is set in the time of the Warring States period (479-221 BC), during which the nations of Qin, Zhao, Yan, Han, Chu, Qi, Wei, Jin, and many others fought with each other. The story is told through the eyes of Bao Peng, a young boy who is living in the city of Yin. A traitor comes to Yin to ask for aid of the king of Zhao, King Xuan of Zhou. The king of Zhou sends Bao and his friend Han Zhe to the town of Zhao to report on the situation there. They are murdered by a local official called Cao who threatens the entire Zhao county with divine judgement unless they hand over the king of Zhou and the traitor. The king of Zhou is executed. Bao Peng escapes to the west and lives with a tribe that is not interested in warfare and simply wishes to enjoy life. There, Bao meets Lu Shang and begins to suspect that a traitor is still present.
